

Brahui in Pakistan

The Brahui were once a powerful people who led various tribes together to overthrow a dynasty of Hindu kings. For hundreds of years, the Brahui have been a nomadic, shepherding people, moving their flocks throughout the year. Over time, the shepherds banded together into shepherding houses, known as khalks. As their nomadic ways decreased with the formation of small towns and villages, the khalks put their flocks under the care of an expert shepherd. This frees others to create income through farming.

Ministry Obstacles

As a nomadic people of a harsh land, the Brahui are difficult to keep up with. Workers need to heavily adapt to the Brahui lifestyle. In addition, their Islamic beliefs do not make room for a risen savior.

Outreach Ideas

Though literacy is low, audio and visual mediums could be very effective in reaching the Brahui.
