

Hakka Chinese in Cambodia

Characteristically, the Hakkas have been dentists, shoemakers or Chinese medicine merchants. Today, many Hakka families have started the popular noodle shops that line city streets in Cambodia. Hakka noodles, or hakka mee, are yellow noodles topped with minced chicken or pork and condiments. Hakka food is so delicious that there are now Hakka Chinese restaurants spread throughout the West as well as East Asian countries.

Ministry Obstacles

There is an attitude among the Hakka that spirituality is flexible, and that Christianity is only for Westerners. The Hakka can easily stick with traditional religion and face a Christless eternity because they are unwilling to give him a chance to transform their hearts.

Outreach Ideas

Christian believers can become regular customers of Hakka food vendors during the slow hours. They can tell them about what Jesus can do to help their families prosper spiritually.
