

Arabized Harasi in Oman

The Harasi are a small, isolated tribe of Bedouins who raise camels and goats in the Jiddat il-Harasiis desert of central Oman. As modern-day nomads, most use SUVs to move their herds to seasonal grazing lands. They pride themselves on being robust and independent and having the ability to survive without much water.

Obstacles

Their seasonal movement and remote isolation make it difficult to share the gospel with the Harasi. In addition, they are followers of Islam. Many also practice Sufism and animism.

Outreach Ideas

Some of the Harasi men work skilled positions in cities, returning to the desert for extended vacations during holiday seasons. If these men could be reached with the saving message of Christ, they could successfully carry the good news back to their families and tribe.
