

Idaksahak in Mali

The Idaksahak (meaning “sons of Isaac”) formerly were herders for Tuareg nobles, in return for their protection. This relationship has now broken down, and there is less mixing of the Idaksahak with the Tuaregs. However, they use the same watering holes, and they trade at the same markets. Some have become settled farmers while many are nomads. Though most live in Mali, the nomads may reach into Algeria and Niger. The men are often bilingual, speaking their own language and the language of the Tuareg. The women and children are often isolated in their camps and speak only their own language.

Ministry Obstacles

It is difficult to contact and develop relationships with nomadic peoples.

Outreach Ideas

Gospel recordings are available in the Tadaksahak language. Workers should consider taking recordings to these people, developing friendships, and pursuing opportunities to share the recordings.
