

Khang in Vietnam

Have you even accidentally got a liquid down your nose? According to Wikipedia, the indigenous Khang people who live in interior forests of northern Vietnam have a custom of pouring drinks down their noses. The Khang make their living from agriculture and animal husbandry. They believe that evil spirits can bring disaster upon the living; therefore these spirits must be appeased through offerings, rituals and amulets.

Ministry Obstacles

The Khang language has only portions of the New Testament translated. Less than one percent are followers of Jesus. Ethnic religion is deeply rooted in this people's identity making it very difficult for them to accept a "foreign" savior.

Outreach Ideas

Vietnamese believers can build relationships with the Khang through business ventures. Medical and educational teams can help the Khang in practical ways.

Prayer Focus

Pray that the very small number of Christ followers grows spiritually and
