

Malay in Hong Kong, China

Malay people live throughout southeastern Asia with the majority in Malaysia. The dispersal of Malay people was in progress by the fifth century A.D., when they began to dominate local trade in southeastern Asia and long-distance trade between northwestern India and southern China. At that time, some migrated to Hong Kong.

Ministry Obstacles

The strongest characteristic of Malay identity that remains consistent regardless of their location is their adherence to the Islamic religion.

Outreach Ideas

Courtesy is a very important aspect of Malay society no matter where they live. Most of their groups are loosely structured, their commitments are not strong, and loyalty to a group is not as important as being courteous. Those who take Christ to them must remember and act upon this virtue.
