

Kharga in Egypt

The Selima Kharga are Bedouins who live in Egyptian desert areas west of the city of Alexandria.

Bedouins live nomadic lifestyles, leading their camels, goats, and sheep to sources of water and food.

Governments discourage this type of life as it makes collecting taxes difficult and nearly impossible for Bedouin children to regularly attend school. Some Kharga young people are moving to cities looking for a better life.

Ministry Obstacles

Being a Muslim is part of the personal identity of the Bedouin. Nomadic peoples are some of the most challenging to reach with the gospel. Missionaries would have to follow the Kharga in their seasonal travels throughout the desert.

Outreach Ideas

The JESUS Film is available in Libyan Arabic, the language of the Kharga. Teams of medical workers and veterinarians can demonstrate the love of Christ to the Kharga in practical ways.
