

Karapoto in Brazil

Though many Brazilian tribes are still undiscovered by the outside world, some have been in contact with the Portuguese speaking majority for a long time. Among these are the Karapoto people, who are somewhat assimilated with Brazilian society. They have their own language, which is being replaced by Brazil's trade language, Portuguese. This people group is sedentary, not nomadic like some of the other tribes of Brazil. They are farmers and herders.

Ministry Obstacles

In their minds they think that another way of worship (Christianity) disconnects them from their traditions, ethnicity, and society. Many have not had contact with those who put Christ's teachings into practice.

Outreach Ideas

There are a few believers from this tribe, so they would be the best people to share their faith with others.

Prayer Focus

Pray that He will renew their faith and ignite their souls with the desire to see their people group know the One True God Who created them. Pray that the veil would drop from the spiritual eyes
