

South Asians in the United Kingdom

Most South Asians come to the United Kingdom able to speak English. In the early 1970s, many South Asian professional people came to the U.K. At first, they came mainly to the big cities but then came to the larger towns also. Many South Asians live in London, Leicester and Bradford. They generally tend to keep to their own communities and keep their own religions and cultures. They can be reached by South Asian Christians. They have their own national radio station called BBC Asian Network. South Asians come from India, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, and Pakistan.

Ministry Obstacles

Caste prejudice may hinder cross-caste evangelism as will traditional Hindu-Muslim tensions and ethnic politics. Muslims are seldom open to change.

Outreach Ideas

Evangelistic radio on BBC Asian Network will overcome much ethnic politics. English clubs may attract new-comers, even to churches.
