

Tseku in China

The Tseku people live in the high, remote Himalayan Mountains.

They live in freezing, blizzardlike weather. The Tseku either adapt to the climate or they perish. Their food source usually comes from the meat and milk from their livestock and from barley and rice. They are an inconspicuous people group. Since their language is similar to the Kham Tibetans, they are probably mistaken for members of that larger people group.

Ministry Obstacles

Few, if any, Christian workers are willing to live in such a remote, inhospitable land. Tibetan Buddhism is also a major spiritual obstacle.

Outreach Ideas

There are believers in China who are trying to take the gospel "back to Jerusalem," which means that the peoples of Tibet and Bhutan are on their radar screen.

Prayer Focus

There are no believers among the Tseku people in Bhutan and perhaps a very small number in China. Pray for the Lord to bring about a movement to Christ in the 2020s. Pray for the
