

Bahing in Nepal

The Bahing are one of the Kirat peoples, a cluster of tribal peoples living in Nepal. As a tribal people, the Bahing are vulnerable to changes imposed by outsiders. For this reason, they have an organization to protect their rights from those who might try to seize their land. They enjoy celebrating the festival of colors, the start of spring and the festival of lights.

Ministry Obstacles

The Bahing worship and serve the gods of the Hindu pantheon. They visit temples and offer prayers, food, flowers and incense in hopes of gaining protection and benefits. They do not have a personal or familial relationship with their gods like Christians or Jews.

Outreach Ideas

Missionaries can help give the Bahing people the skills to adjust to the twenty-first century. Unless they are equipped with job skills, it is only a matter of time before others take their land and leave them with nothing.
